FOREWORD

Few issues in international law are as significant and controversial as the subject of this second volume of the Hofstra Law and Policy Symposium — the international legal personality of actors on the international stage. Volume 2 focuses on a developing topic in international law with contributions from a distinguished set of authors and a note from a Hofstra Law student. This second volume addresses international law relations among states, international organizations, and non-governmental organizations and it complements the treatment, in the inaugural Volume 1, of state constitutions and relations among states, local and federal governments and citizens under domestic law. Volume 3 of the Symposium, to be published in 1998, will deal with the topic of Privacy Protection and the New Technology. Each of these annual, faculty-edited, volumes tackles cutting-edge subjects of domestic or international law. I am confident that in the years ahead the assembled collection of this symposium will serve as a valued and useful resource tool for academics and practitioners alike.
