Dear Graduates:

As lawyers, you will be confronted with many moral challenges in the practice of law.

A story is told about a famous Sufi master who was called upon to judge a certain case. After hearing the claimant’s story he exclaimed, “This man speaks the truth.” The second litigant then related his version of the facts after which the master once again said, “This man speaks the truth.”

Finally, one of the attendant students asked, “Master, how can both these men speak the truth?” The master answered softly, “This man also speaks the truth.”

This fable illustrates the dilemma lawyers often face in determining the truth. Many come to believe that truth is relative. As a result, they compromise their values in order to win small legal victories.

If you enter the practice of law without a code of personal moral values, I believe you will never fully understand the purpose of your profession which is to serve justice. Let your hearts and minds be your guide and serve no master other than truth, the handmaiden of justice.

On behalf of the Hofstra University School of Law Alumni Association, Inc., I congratulate you and wish you the best of success with your careers.

Sincerely,

Thomas Robert Stevens
