A MESSAGE TO THE CLASS OF 1994

The first time that we will read our Law School Yearbooks will be right after receiving them — will our photographs reflect our individual suave sophistication gained after three years of Law School? Undoubtedly, the next time we will reach for our Yearbooks will be to look up our classmates; to reminisce about who has just referred a client to you; to reflect on who has just appeared in the New York Law Journal after winning an important case before the New York Court of Appeals; to remember who has just successfully made new law before the Supreme Court of the United States.

More than mere moments frozen in time, yearbooks are like time capsules. Pressed and sealed within are the accomplishments and successes of those that make them up. A message of belief in the future. Our Yearbook is no exception. Pressed within this book are our accomplishments and successes, as well as our hopes, ambitions and those other intangibles that made our class special and unique.
When the Class of 1994’s Yearbook is open, what will be found is a rare and uncommon constituency, a diverse make up of individuals brought together by the single common goal to learn the law. It will reveal our message of hope and inspiration for the future.

In achieving our collective purpose we have more than travelled through three years; together we have traversed a course of self awareness. However, this knowledge is incomplete, and our lives our still unfolding before us. Further, our individual aspirations will carry many of us on journeys to district and separate jurisdictions. Nevertheless, the Hofstra University School of Law Class of 1994 has marked its place in time and shares the bonds of experience, friendship and the worthy goal of practicing law.
