BY ARCHIBALD ROBBINS,
The narratives and journals of travelleti, standard to the continuers, the thip wrecked and priloners are of a told with exaggerations, and not unfrequent condemned as deceiving rather than informed the world. The author of the following a citizen of Connectient, and one of nas enource miteries uncommon to human na-ture. By the bleffings of a merciful Providence, he has furvived to detail bis fullerings to the world. If truth will excite aftonifinated and even occasion incredulity, he cannot help it that even occasion incredutity, ne cannot neep a po-he has refolved to tell a plain worstroisted tale of extreme fufficing—of the manners, costoms and habits of the extraordinary people among whom he endured it. He will fubmic it to the and habits of the extraordinary people among whom he endured it. He will shomic it to the world, hoping that the liberality of the public will, in a final degree, compeniate him for his fuffering, by reading the tale of it.
