THE HOWARD LICHTENSTEIN
DISTINGUISHED PROFESSORSHIP

was established in 1989 to remember Howard Lichtenstein, an outstanding lawyer with a genuine interest in legal education and the training and development of young lawyers. During his 44 years of practice, his primary concentration was in the field of labor law. As a senior partner at the law firm of Proskauer Rose Goetz & Mendelsohn, he was considered an authority on administrative law. In addition, Mr. Lichtenstein was a strong advocate for improving the teaching of legal ethics.

THOMAS D. MORGAN

Thomas D. Morgan has been the Oppenheim Professor of Antitrust and Trade Regulation Law at The George Washington University Law School since 1989. He has also served as dean at the Emory University School of Law, and on the faculties of Brigham Young University and the University of Illinois.

Professor Morgan has taught and written in the field of professional responsibility for more than 35 years and is co-author of the widely used casebook Professional Responsibility: Problems and Materials (11th ed., 2011). He served as one of two associate reporters for the American Law Institute's Restatement of the Law (Third): The Law Governing Lawyers and for the American Bar Association's Ethics 2000 Commission.

In 1990, Professor Morgan served as president of the Association of American Law Schools, and he is currently chair of an AALS special committee reviewing proposed changes in the ABA standards for the accreditation of law schools. His book The Vanishing American Lawyer was published in February 2010 by Oxford University Press.

THE RISE OF INSTITUTIONAL LAW PRACTICE

For generations, the legal profession has assumed that individual lawyers practice law. Ethical standards have been largely directed at individuals, and practice organizations have often been regulated to prevent limitations on individual lawyer judgment.

The world in which American lawyers now practice makes the individualized model obsolete. The complexity of modern law narrows the breadth of any individual lawyer's practice and makes law firms inevitable. Firms, in turn, must maintain both ethical compliance and a level of quality inconsistent with idiosyncratic lawyer behavior. Corporate and government legal offices face similar issues.

The lecture will explore these developments and suggest changes in the rules governing lawyer conduct needed to respond to the possibilities and problems the developments create.
