Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court—Constitutional Law—There is a first amendment right of the press and public to be present during the criminal trial in which the victim is a minor; any statute authorizing a mandatory closure during a minor victim's testimony is unconstitutional; any statute authorizing the use of discretion by the trial judge in deciding whether or not to close the courtroom will be upheld where the standard used is that of a “compelling state interest.” 102 S. A

ALLOCATIVE EFFICIENCY
Markovits’ Response to Posner’s Reply
Posner’s reply was misleading and unresponsive to the major criticisms set forth by Markovits; therefore warranting a response 667-69
Posner’s conception of wealth is in error because of the way he measured the winners’ dollar gains and the losers’ dollar losses 669-72
Seven theoretical grounds for rejecting Posner’s claim that the common law of torts is allocatively efficient 672-74
The Markovits position on the allocative efficiency of tort law, and responses to Posner’s comments on the topic 676-79
Analysis of Posner’s four different explanations for the supposed allocative efficiency of common law 680-86

ATTORNEY’S FEES
Equal Access to Justice Act
American courts generally do not award attorney’s fees, however, there are two exceptions: (1) the bad faith exclusion and (2) the common fund or common benefit exclusion 309-11
The EAJA applies to administrative cases in which a hearing is required by statute; and the Model Rules of the Administrative Conference of the United States requires each federal agency to list categories of cases to which the EAJA applies 311-13
The Tax Court and tort cases are not covered by the EAJA 313-15
Three criteria that must be fulfilled to be eligible for an award of attorney’s fees 315-20
Once qualified, fees will be awarded unless the government can prove that its position is substantially justified or that special circumstances would make an award unjust 320-27

CIVIL PROCEDURE
Sanctions in the Proposed Amendments to the Fed. R. Civ. P.
Sanctions are an important issue in the proposed amendments to Rules 11, 16 and 26 997-1001
The power of the Supreme Court to promulgate such expansive sanctions should not be based solely on the amended version of 28 U.S.C. § 1927 1002-04
The Supreme Court’s “inherent power” provides little basis for the expansion of the sanctions 1004-06
History of the 1934 Rules Enabling Act indicates that Congress did intend to restrict rule making, however, there is evidence that the Supreme Court does have the power to promulgate rules which authorize sanctions 1006-08
Required sanctions would remove the trial court’s discretion in imposing sanctions 1009-11

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW
Border Search Exceptions
Border searches are subject to special rules 733-45
Historical justification as a basis for subjecting border searches to special rules is inaccurate 745-52
Analysis of judicial treatment of administrative searches and border searches 752-59
Second Circuit’s reasoning in United States v. Ajlouny 760-63
Border searches of outgoing persons or goods should not be subject to the same special rules which govern incoming persons or goods 763-72

Establishment Clause Standing
A narrow reading of Valley Forge v. Americans for the Separation of Church and State, Inc. requires a taxpayer plaintiff, in order to have standing under the Establishment Clause, to allege a financial injury because of the challenged expenditure 67-73
Standing has been allowed in non-expenditure cases because establishment cases frequently do not create specifically aggrieved plaintiffs, and the clause is directed at non-specific injuries 77-89
In non-expenditure cases, standing is predicated on the interest a plaintiff has in removing the vestiges of establishment from his community 84-89
The Valley Forge plaintiffs failed to meet the article III standing requirements 89-95

Executive Agreements
Three general types of executive agreements 811
Treaty related agreements are concluded by the Executive pursuant to a Treaty previously ratified by the Senate 811-15
Congressional delegation of authority usually empowers the president to conclude agreements related to the subject matter of the statute 815-19
Presidential agreements are entered into solely on the basis of the Executive's constitutional power 822-24
The constitutional provisions that form the basis for the foreign affairs powers of the President are the commander-in-chief clause and the President's power to receive foreign ambassadors 824-28
Traditionally, the Executive has had the discretion to choose between the use of the treaty or agreement mechanism. This categorization determines the extent of congressional participation 831
The State Department has outlined criteria to determine whether to use the treaty or executive agreement mechanism 831-32
Congress has attempted to exert control over executive agreements by requiring disclosure of any international agreements to Congress within sixty days of their execution 837-38
Recent Congressional attempts to enact a general legislative veto provision which would enable Congress to disapprove executive agreements have failed 838-41

Culpability Standards for § 1983 and Bivens Actions
Three distinct sources of culpability in § 1983 and Bivens actions 557-60
The standard of culpability in § 1983 actions; individual, municipal, and state liability 560-66
The standard of fault that § 1983 requires the plaintiff to prove to establish a prima facie case 567-79
The standard of culpability imposed by qualified immunity 579-604
The standard of culpability imposed by the Constitution 604-11
The standard of culpability imposed in Bivens actions; individual and governmental liability 611-17
The standard of fault in Bivens actions 617-25

First Amendment
Protection of free speech is undermined by the Court's acceptance, without applying its own scrutiny, of a legislative determination that traffic safety and aesthetic concerns outweigh First Amendment rights 375-81
City's regulation of noncommercial speech held unconstitutional 381-82
Analysis of the Supreme Court's decision in Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego concerning the content of billboard messages 385-92
Justice Brennan's concurrence proposes that a total ban on billboards will be allowable if a substantial governmental interest is furthered by the ban, and that this method could not be accomplished by a less restrictive means 393-96
Justice Stevens' dissent states that a total ban would be constitutional; free speech is not an absolute right and can be outweighed by governmental interests 396-400
Chief Justice Burger's dissent concentrates on billboards as intrusive and offensive and fails to recognize their unique value as a medium of communication 400-04
A total ban is qualitatively different from a time, place, or manner regulation and should be more closely scrutinized to avoid the restriction of the flow of ideas and information 404-11

Foreign Policy Role of the President

Constitutional provisions which grant the President power in foreign affairs 775-80

Express Constitutional provision theory which asserts that the President's powers are strictly limited to the express provisions of the Constitution 782-83

Inherent powers theory states that the President's powers do not come from the Constitution, instead they are inherent in the office and are similar to the powers granted to Congress 783-89

Implied concurrent powers theory takes the middle road — that the text of the Constitution is susceptible to interpretation and the President may be allowed to exercise power not specifically referred to in the document 789-80

Framers' Intent

Problems of the government under the Articles of Confederation included a lack of adequate authority, a lack of Congressional control over foreign affairs, and repeated treaty violations by the states 416-23

Differing political beliefs of the Framers 423-28

The Constitutional Convention's revision of the Articles of Confederation 428-40

Framers incorporated a system of checks and a separation of powers into the Constitution 440-44

The commander-in-chief clause evidences the Framers' intent that the President has only limited war powers 445-48

All the significant war powers, including the declaring of war, the raising of troops, and the issuing of letters of marque and reprisal, in the legislative branch 448-52

The constitutional provision concerning the making of treaties provided for both presidential action in the negotiation of treaties and also for safeguards against the improper use of the treaty authority 452-57

The course of foreign affairs during the Washington administration and the evolution of presidential dominance in the external sphere 457-81

The Pacificus-Helvidius letters portraying Madison's and Hamilton's views on presidential power 481-87

The debates over the Jay Treaty furnish insight into the constitutional interpretations espoused by American political leaders and the ratification of the treaty established a precedent for future American treatymaking 489-506

The Limits of Presidential Foreign Policy Power

Protection of individual constitutional rights is the essence of judicial duty and the courts are willing to adjudicate these claims even in the area of foreign relations 519-21

Controversies arising under treaties fall within the jurisdiction of the federal courts 521-24

Standing: Congressionally created standing 527-29

Taxpayer and Citizen Standing 529-31

Legislator Standing 531-34

Ripeness doctrine — Congress must assert its constitutional authority before seeking judicial intervention to stop the President 534-37

Political question doctrine and the separation of powers 538-47

Waterman doctrine: federal courts must dismiss any claim dealing with foreign affairs 547-48

Use of the political question doctrine to a separation of powers issue 549-53

Expanding the political question doctrine will weaken congressional power while enhancing the President's role 553-55

Public Access to Criminal Trials

Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court further establishes the right of the press and public to view criminal trials 1355-57

A minimal intrusion on the rights of the press and public to view criminal trials will be allowed upon the showing of a compelling state interest 1357-58

Chief Justice Burger's dissent in Globe
recognizes that state statutes offering purposeful protection of the minor victim of a sex crime serves an important governmental interest 1359-60
The Globe opinion further perpetuates the disparate treatment of juvenile delinquents as compared to juvenile victims 1360-61
The historical preference for open trials has not been absolute; there is significant evidence of special treatment extended to child victims of sex crimes, most notably, a “closed trial” 1362-67
The potential for emotional trauma to a minor victim of a sex crime when testifying should outweigh any arguments against a minimal intrusion into a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to a public trial and the press and public's right to access 1367-71
Legislative enactment of procedural safeguards such as a special child's courtroom, may alleviate some of the inherent problems in any case-by-case discretionary standards where the trial judge makes the ultimate decision as to whether the courtroom shall be open 1376-78

COPYRIGHT
Protection of Read Only Memory (ROM) Chips
Significance of the need for protection of computer programs 331-33
Brief introduction and history of computers 333-37
Memory devices and storage of information in a computer 337-39
Types of programming languages 339-41
ROM's are used as software delivery mediums 343
An idea cannot be protected, but the expression of that idea can be protected; computer programs are the expression of an idea 344
Congressional protection of computer programs 348-50
Courts have provided little guidance concerning the scope of copyright protection for computer programs 351-58
Though patent protection exists for hardware, copyright protection is ineffective for software 360
The period of copyright protection, the author's life plus fifty years, is too long and the maximum protection should be five years 361-63
Policing of copyright infringements 363-65
The use of a master to determine if there has been a copyright infringement 365-68

DESIGN PROTECTION
Protection of the Design of Useful Articles
Copyright versus design patent protection 1045-50
Articles that have been left unprotected by the courts 1051-53
Case law confusion: Mazer v. Stein 1053-55
Esquire, Inc. v. Ringer 1055-59
Kieselstein-Cord v. Accessories by Pearl, Inc. 1059-62
Proposal for judicial resolution of the conflict 1062-65
The design bill was not incorporated into the Copyright Act of 1976 1065-68
Proposed remedies to correct the design bill 1068-71

EDUCATION
School Finance
Dilemmas of school financing include varying fiscal capability and state versus local authority 1210-13
The New York Court of Appeals, in Board of Education v. Nyquist, upheld the shared funding scheme as rationally designed to further the legitimate objective of local control over education, and rejected the argument that the state constitution's education article gave special protection to an interest in equality of education 1213-25
The New Jersey Supreme Court, in Robinson v. Cahill, mandated that the state define the educational obligation imposed by the state constitution, and devise a financing system to guarantee that level of educational opportunity to every pupil 1226-35
Because school finance cases directly involve the state political process of making decisions concerning the way benefits and burdens of government are distributed, federal judicial scrutiny should be limited 1235-44
State courts testing school finance programs against the state constitution should utilize available technical and scientific information 1244-59

State Legislatures
Enhancement of legislative capacity by an increase of time, better organization, and more assistance and information afforded to the legislatures 1187-92
The change in the composition of the state legislatures 1192-95
Legislative performance has improved due to the enhancement of legislative capacity and the change in membership composition 1195-99
Problems confronting the maintenance of state legislatures 1199-1204

F

FAMILY LAW

Child Snatching
The judicial system in the United States has encouraged noncustodial parents to resort to child snatching 1075-81
The jurisdictional requirements of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) must be met before a court can exercise jurisdiction in an interstate custody dispute 1082-86
The "clean hands" doctrine has been incorporated into the UCCJA to discourage child snatching 1086-87
A court must consider the child's best interests before exercising jurisdiction under the UCCJA 1087-90
States must extend full faith and credit to a sister state's custody decree issued under the UCCJA 1090-92
A custody decree issued in accordance with the UCCJA may meet due process requirements even without a court's personal jurisdiction over the nonresident parent 1092-1100
The jurisdictional requirements of the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act of 1980 (PKPA) are similar to those of the UCCJA 1101-04
Under certain conditions, the PKPA enables a court to modify another state's custody decree 1104-06
The application of the UCCJA and the PKPA is limited 1112-13
Common law tort actions may provide a deterrence to child snatching 1113-16

Professional Degrees as Marital Property
In common law jurisdictions, separate property remains separate and this is determined by title, while only jointly owned property is subject to distribution 1327
In community property jurisdictions, each spouse has an undivided one-half interest in the marital property 1348
Under the equitable distribution system, property is distributed equitably between the spouses in accordance with the state's criteria 1327
Four approaches to educational degrees as marital property:
1) Awards based on the monetary value of the degree entitle the spouse to a share of the future earnings and capacity made possible by the degree 1329-35
2) Restitutional awards recompense the spouse for out-of-pocket expenses and are based on the theories of quasi-contract and unjust enrichment 1335-41
3) A majority of the courts have concluded that a professional degree is not marital property 1341-45
4) Model approach would exclude an educational degree from the marital estate 1346-51

H

HOLMES, JR., OLIVER WENDELL

Development of Free Speech Doctrine
Early influences on the development of his free speech position 101-07
Harvard's legal education as an influence 107-13
English philosophy as an influence 113-15
Early career positions on free speech 115-22
Massachusetts Supreme Court decisions on free speech; Holmes continues to support Blackstone's view 122-25
Supreme Court decisions: Patterson v. Colorado, Fox v. Washington 125-31
Chafee's attack on the Espionage Act represented the first time Holmes was presented with a sound legal argument in favor of a broader free speech interpretation 131-44
The clear and present danger test 150-63
The clear and present danger test as applied to Schenck, Frohwerk, and Debs 163-74
The Abrams dissent—factual differences 174-86
As a result of several different influences, Holmes' legal position on free speech did change 186-89

LEGISPRUDENCE

Legal Theory
Legisprudence is a theoretical study of the legislative aspects of the legal order which has been completely overshadowed by jurisprudential inquiry focusing mainly on the judicial side of legal order 1163-64
The legislative process may be more complex than the process of judicial decision making, yet its unruly political character has precluded the same intellectual inquiry afforded the deliberate and rational judicial arm of the legal order 1165-66
Legisprudence is perceived as a theoretical discipline and is of little interest to the would-be practitioner who favors a traditional law school curriculum in preparation for the bar exam 1167
Common or overlapping problems do not create jurisdictional disputes where the objective is to observe these problems from a legisprudential point of view 1168-82
A proposed agenda for legisprudence would require a broader view of the problems of the legal order by judges and lawyers, and a change in the judicially oriented perspective of law schools 1182-83

JURISPRUDENCE
The inadequacies of Pugsley's arguments against the utilitarian theory of punishment 276-80
Telishment: the public punishment of one person for the benefit of society to inhibit others from committing similar acts, regardless of that person's innocence or guilt 280-86
The deterrence argument 286-88
Critique of Pugsley's Kantian justification of punishment 288-93
Pugsley's retributivist doctrine of proportionality 293-97
Capital Punishment 298-303

JURY CONTROL
Expanding the Scope of Recovery Without Loss of Jury Control
Damages for negligently induced mental distress: Traditional rule 942-44
Restatement's "zone of danger" rule 944-45

Dillon v. Legg doctrine 945-48
Negligent infliction of emotional distress without any accompanying physical harm 948-52
Objective test of serious mental distress 952-55
Negligently inflicted pure pecuniary loss 960-65
Products liability:
Two main tests of defect, the "unreasonably dangerous" test and the "consumer expectations" test 967-78
Causation and manufacturer liability 978-92

POLITICS
Filing Deadlines
Ballot access restrictions, in particular, filing deadline statutes, burden two fundamental first amendment rights: the right of association and the right to vote 697-700
Two-tier mode of equal protection analysis: (1) strict scrutiny and (2) the rational relation test 701-03
The Court's adoption of an intermediate standard, which balances the opposing state interest with the individual's constitutional interests 703-10
Four possible state interests which might support filing deadline statutes: 1) administrative efficiency, 2) voter awareness, 3) voter confusion, 4) political stability 711-21
Burdens imposed upon candidates and their supporters by filing deadline statutes 721-25
When the purported state interests supporting the filing deadline statute, in Anderson v. Celebrezze, are balanced against the constitutional interests burdened by the statute, the statute should be declared unconstitutional 728-31
Right of Association
The right of association and support of parties has a long but ambivalent history 194-96
Courts' treatment of parties: State courts did not invade the independence of parties, but allowed state regulation of primary laws in the early 20th century 196-200
The Supreme Court's involvement first came with the issue of racial grounds for the exclusion of voting in primaries 200-03
The Supreme Court employed an individualist philosophy of politics and broadened the possibility of regulation of parties 203-08
Parties have a first amendment right to pursue the policies of unity, promotion, and choice 208-09
Privacy is essential to the ability of the parties to achieve their goals 210-13
Multiple parties contribute to the aggregation of public views and have adopted many of the original functions of the electoral college 213-17
Political parties came to play a part in choosing and controlling political leaders 217-19
Politics offers much opportunity for corruption 221-23
Regulations to eliminate corruption 223-30
While primaries have allowed the voters more access, they do not have the ability to aggregate the public views that conventions have 231-35
Current primary laws provide questionable benefits while incurring some harm 238-43
Less restrictive means of controlling corruption than primary laws are viable 243-47
PRODUCTS LIABILITY
Judicial Screening
Justiciability and the law of torts 866-71
The governmental immunity theory is one of the oldest single-factor no-duty rules 872-74
Judges should employ a multi-factor duty analysis in screening products liability cases 875-80
The political question doctrine is one example of the traditional policy decisions of non-justiciable discretion 880-85
Present proposals for federal legislation to reform products liability litigation are wholly inadequate to alleviate properly the strain caused by untrammelled use of risk utility analysis and an open ended reasonableness standard 886-94
Consumer expectations, coupled with risk utility analysis, provide a standard for judicial screening of all types of product liability cases 895-932
Failure to warn cases 932-35

Discussion of the reliability of the recommendations of a study group, committee hearings, committee reports, floor debates, and interim amendments 1130-33
Recent attempts to clarify the judicial use of legislative history in the judicial handling of statutes 1134-45
Proposals for making legislative history more available to courts, and therefore more useful 1146-52
Academic efforts should be focused on the better drafting rather than on advocating the wholesale use of legislative history 1160-62

SUCCESSOR CORPORATE LIABILITY
Traditionally, a successor corporation was not liable for defective products manufactured by its predecessor 249-52
The doctrine of corporate entity ordinarily precludes suits against shareholders on account of debts owed or wrongs committed by their corporations 256-60
Three doctrines that may provide the grounds for a suit against successor corporations:
- fraudulent conveyance law 261-64
- bulk sales law 265-66
- risk allocation analysis 266-70
Predecessor and successor liability situations analyzed 270-72

TAX
Taxation of Nonrecourse Mortgagors
Analysis in the Supreme Court’s decision in Crane v. Commissioner 8-33
Three alternative rationales as to why nonrecourse debts ought to be included in the amount realized:
- economic benefit rationale 33-36
- tax benefit rationale 36-39
- double deduction rationale 39-40
Discussion of the uniform treatment rationale which is based on the premise that if two different transactions, one involving nonrecourse debt and one not, is sufficiently similar, then uniform tax treatment of each transaction is warranted 46-57

TORTS
Affirmative Duty
At common law there exists no general affirmative duty to prevent harm to others 1013-19
Factors which support the theory that a general affirmative duty should not be imposed 1020-23
The special relationship exception which imposes a duty to act 1025-28
The California Supreme Court decision, in Tarasoff v. Regents of the University of California, imposed liability on a psychologist for failure to warn a potential victim of a patient based on the special relationship that existed between the patient and the psychologist 1028-36
Policy considerations can be employed to extend affirmative duties to situations where desirable action would result in minimal interference with the defendant's freedom of activity 1039-41

The Feres Exception to the FTCA
Background to the Feres exception and the reasons underlying the doctrine 629-37
Discussion of the tension between Feres and United States v. Yellow Cab in Stencel Aero Engineering Corp. v. United States 638-39 Post-Stencel analysis applied to:
- Uptegrove v. United States 642-45
- Woodside v. United States 645-47
- Parker v. United States 647-50
- Miller v. United States 650-60
- Johnson v. United States 660-64

Product Design Cases
Inconsistent outcomes arise in the courtroom when judges and juries must balance traditional tort values with design and marketing decisions which are usually reserved for corporate management 846-48
More specific rules and standards should be established by either the legislature

or judiciary in product design cases 848-52

Certain authorities have called for more creative judging as a reform measure in product design cases 852-55

Creative judging will not solve the problem courts face in balancing open-ended questions of reasonableness in product design cases 855-60

Toxic Tort Liability
Judicial obstacles which toxic tort victims must overcome to obtain judicial remedy 1300-01

Causion theories in asbestos litigation:
substantial factor test 1306-07
market share liability 1307-08
last injurious exposure 1308-10
duration and intensity 1311-12

Application of asbestos causation theories to toxic torts arising from hazardous waste 1312-15

Caustion theories in DES litigation:
market share liability 1316-18
alternative liability 1318-21 concerted action 1321-22

Application of DES causation theories to toxic torts arising from hazardous waste 1321-25

Proposed solution to the causation dilemma in toxic tort cases — shifting the burden of proof to the defendant 1325-26

TRADEMARKS

First Amendment Protection and Trademark Use

Lanham Act defines the term “trademark” 1262-63
First Amendment protection and the commercial speech exception 1265-67

Three stages in the life of a trademark:
primary stage 1269
secondary stage 1269
tertiary stage 1270

The Supreme Court's four part test to determine if a trademark was constitutionally protected 1272-74
Protection afforded a trademark in each stage of its life 1274-76
Restrictions on the use of a trademark 1276-87

Restrainment of trade by the use of:
exclusive-dealing arrangements 1289-90
tie-ins 1290-92
unlawful monopolies 1292

Effective procompetitive limitation on trademark rights — "genericide" 1295-98

of course

USCA is far and away the leader. It is used in more law offices than any other federal law source. This leadership has been maintained for 56 years. There are many reasons, but USCA's unequaled completeness is the one most mentioned by its lawyer subscribers.

Your West representative will demonstrate to you, with specific examples, the many reasons for USCA's continued leadership. He or she will show you why we say: USCA, of course.
